

Attention Cubs and Scouts Leaders:

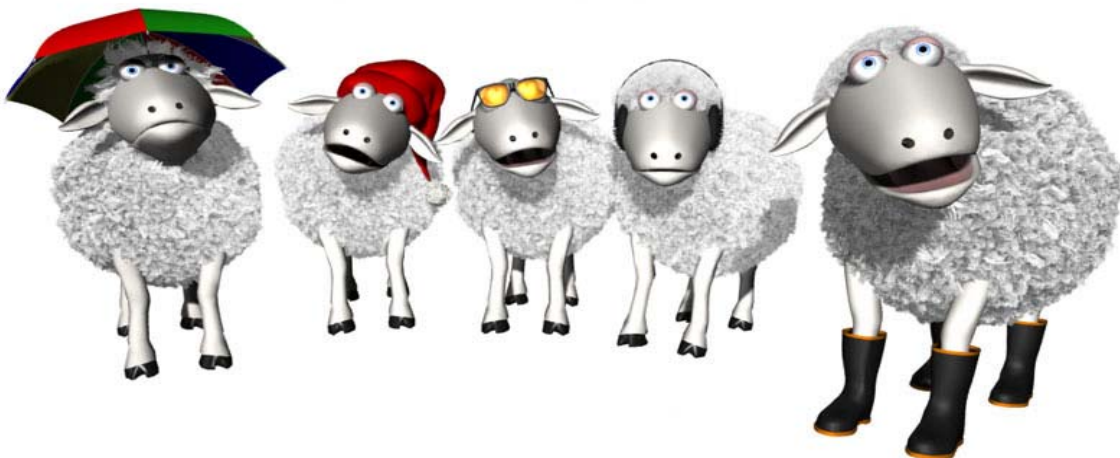

The Climate Change Show Traveling Exhibit is coming to Vancouver this spring – a perfect match to environmental awareness, Earth Day activities and the Climate Change Challenge!

Hearing a lot these days about Climate Change and the Kyoto Accord? Seeing those hybrid vehicles and tiny Smart Cars and cruising around town? More and more people on bikes and skateboards? Thinking that perhaps you'd like to talk to your troops about what it all means in the bigger picture? Well coming soon is the perfect way to introduce your Cubs and Scouts to climate change and its connection to how we use energy: A multimedia, multisensory exhibit, which will be at Science World from April 9th-May 15th - lead by none other than a talking sheep with rubber boots!

When: April 9th – May 15th, 2005

Where: Science World, 1455 Quebec St.

(across the street from the Main St/Science World skytrain station)

The Climate Change Show Traveling Exhibit - getting youth engaged

Tackling climate change is something that youth can really take a leadership role on, with dozens of creative activities, school projects and community service opportunities to make it fun, and at the same time providing concrete links to science, social and global responsibility and critical thinking. The Climate Change Show traveling exhibit is a fantastic tool for making the connection between individual behaviour and energy use to climate change, and it links to the federal One Tonne Challenge (www.climatechange.gc.ca/english/), providing dozens of ways to reduce our personal greenhouse gas emissions.

For more information:

About the traveling exhibit – www.sciencenorth.ca/enterprises/climate/index.html

On group bookings to Science World - www.scienceworld.bc.ca

What the City of Vancouver is doing around climate change – www.coolvancouver.ca or contact Amy Fournier at amy.fournier@vancouver.ca to see how you can get involved.

